

My husband and I greatly appreciate the decrease in unwanted phone calls due to Indiana's Telephone Privacy Law. We are no more interested in receiving marketing or solicitation calls from the institutions with whom we do business, than we are of receiving those from telemarketers and other sources of verbal spam. We support Attorney General Carter's fight against any weakening of the current law. We are free to control the types of printed and electronic media information that enters our home. Why should we not have some say in what enters our home via the phone services for which we pay?
